Program

Labour Community Advocates offer confidential referrals, support, guidance and information to co-workers who are experiencing personal difficulties.

Labour Community Advocates do not provide therapy, nor are they specialists in solving social problems. They are trained to connect their sisters and brothers with resources and services to help with situations that have a personal impact or aren't covered by a collective agreement.

This three level CLC program trains participants to be approachable, good listeners and skilled referral agents at their place of work.

Evening training sessions are available to all interested union members.
